SECRETARY MELLON says to a reporter of Collier's:

"With new tax exempt securities issued at the rate of one thousand million dollars a year, and with other means of escaping income tax, the wealthy need no guardian."

There's wisdom in that short statement. Mr. Mellon knows, for he has a few hundred millions himself. The wealthy need no guardian, and that is why they are wealthy. They know how to take care of themselves.

But the crowd of ninety-odd millions of little nobodies need SEVERAL guardians. With full control of government and legislation in their hands, unused, they allow the very rich to hide their money in tax-free securities and thus escape taxation. This proves that the guardians are needed.

If the people meant it, or if they meant ANYTHING, Congress would immediately pass a law and the President would sign it, doing away with tax-free securities of every kind.

MR. KELLOGG, Secretary of State, tells his countrymen to beware of revolutionary propaganda coming from foreign countries, and Secretary Kellogg surely does not guess on so important a matter.

Unfortunately we have developed in the United States some home contempt for the Constitution, without assistance from Moscow. Ask forty or fifty million Americans what they think of the Constitutional amendment that happens not to suit them.

C. W. GILBERT, learned observer in Washington, says a new secret order is suggested—"The Knights of the Garden of Eden." The job of this new knighthood would be to protect humanity against the infamous suggestion that our ancestors were monkeys. The coat of arms of the new order might show a monkey hanging to a tree on one side and a man hanging to a car strap on the other and the words "NOT related."

BY THE WAY, what about the monkeys in the Garden of Eden? Those that deny evolution believe that all monkeys, the scores of different kinds, played in primitive innocence in the trees of Eden. The lemur, baboon, ourangoutang, chimpanzee, marmoset, ring-tailed rheaus, all of them, including the huge red-haired gorilla, eight feet high, were the playmates of little Cain and Abel.

THE ASSOCIATION of British School Masters says American boys lack manliness, because they are in the hands of women teachers. One agitated editor asks: "Has the American woman teacher turned out an unmanly boy?"

ABRAHAM LINCOLN'S teacher was a woman, his stepmother, and he wasn't exactly an UNMANLY boy. If Lincoln is too old-fashioned for this generation, take Jack Dempsey or Babe Ruth, both taught by women in their youth. They are not effeminate.

HAD PROVIDENCE thought men could teach boys better than women, things would have been arranged for the men to create, bear and raise the children while women went in the fields to work.

One thing is certain: Women, the mothers, original teachers, have gradually changed men from long-toothed cannibalism to the present imitation of civilized beings. If that be effeminacy, make the most of it.

TOM LEE, negro boatman on the Mississippi, lived long before the world heard of him. The steamer Norman sank and he saved thirty lives. The "folks" collected money to buy him a house, much to his surprise. His performances seemed to him commonplace. "I kept going and coming," said he, "until I saved everybody I saw in the river. Then I went to the sand bar and built a fire."

The world exists and life is made possible thanks to the Clinton, June 10.—As an aftermath of a bitter klan and anti-klan riot early today, thirty-seven men stood up in court and pleaded not guilty to charges of creating a disturbance and violating town by-laws.

Bail was set at $100 each for thirty-two alleged offenders and at $300 each for the remaining five, but out of the whole only twenty-five furnished bail in the first few hours following arraignment.

The five defendants who were held in $300 each included Everett Rice of Clinton, charged with assault with intent to kill and with possessing a revolver without a permit; John Bates of Phillipston, Earl Parker of Clinton and Herbert Russ fo Worcester, charged with having in their possession dangerous weapons, and Merle W. Rogers of Southboro was charged with operating an automobile without license or registration.

Meanwhile Captain George A. Parker, head of the State Constabulary, was beginning an investigation and Governor Fuller was denying that he had received any telegram from Selectman Eugene J. McCarthy asking that the Governor view the Clinton damage.

Beautiful love song, "All Alone," written by Irving Berlin, noted composer, shown below, in tribute to Miss Ellin Mackay, shown above, his heiress-sweetheart. The romance of the couple now promises to end in their happy marriage despite objections of Ellin's wealthy father, Clarence H. Mackay. The couple have received a special dispensation to wed from the Pope. Berlin wrote the song while longing for the girl during the days when it seemed their dreams of love would never come true.

YOUTH SHOT SELF BECAUSE SUICIDE GIRL 'MADE HIM'

Proceeding simultaneously along two separate avenues of investigation, the police of Wellesley were confident this afternoon that within the next few hours they would clear up the mystery involved in the killing of Priscilla Amidon, Wellesley school girl, and the wounding of Sterling Mills, her high school sweetheart.

One theory, accepted by most of the investigators, was that the girl killed herself, and the boy, desolated, tried to do likewise.

The second theory, vague, shadowy, incomplete, was based on new evidence secured by the police.

It was that the girl did not die by her own hand, and those holding to it were asking for a chance to talk to Mills at great leisure.

Mills, one of the principals in the tragic ending of a Springtime romance, is at the Newton Hospital. He has a chance to recover.

Youth Couldn't 'Live on Alone'

He was conscious this morning, and when the police asked him why he shot himself, he repeated, over and over: "Because she did. I couldn't live on alone."

He is supposed to have said other things, always sticking

DYING YOUTH BLAMES GIRL IN WELLESLEY 'SUICIDE PACT'

BOY IN LOVE TRAGEDY SAYS: 'SHE MADE ME DO IT'

to the story of a quickly formed suicide pact, carried into effect at his last tryst with the schoolgirl in the woods off the Glen road, not far from Wellesley Farms.

The revolver used by the pair was brought to the tryste by the girl, the early reports said. It was her father's. Later the Wellesley police said they were not quite certain where it came from.

It was a five-chamber affair. Three of the chambers were empty when it was found beside Priscilla Amidon's body.

Scout 'Suicide Pact'

Those who incline to the suicide theory do not think there was any suicide pact of long standing between the two.

There was a bullet in the girl's body, two in the boy's.

An autopsy was to be performed upon her body this afternoon. In the meantime, engineers are taking measurements in the vicinity in which the body was found to ascertain whether it is in the town of Wellesley or the town of Weston.

with the morbidity of youth, she

The theory of the police is that had become thoroughly discouraged by parental opposition to her affair with young Mills, a high school athlete and her idol from childhood.

She asked him to keep tryst with her in the woods off the Glen road.

She went there, with her father's revolver concealed somewhere about her person, and tragedy in her very carriage.

The boy sent blithely. He knew there was opposition to his love, but meant to take the girl child away and marry her and bring her back and let the parents on both sides say what they might want to say.

He told a boy friend that he meant to go to a movie show after the tryst with "Puss," as he called Miss Amidon.

One of the last persons to see them was Warren Bassett, baggage master at the Wellesley Hills depot.

"I knew them both," he said today. "They were laughing and talking and quite gay, particularly the boy. I don't know where the girl had the revolver concealed. It didn't show."

ENDS LIFE BEFORE YOUTH.

Examination by physicians tends to show that the girl shot herself.

Young Mills was a reluctant partner to the hastily-made suicide pact, according to the suicide theory.

Mills is a healthy boy, without the girl's capacity for living drama and seeing drama in his own relations. He had a happy-go-lucky idea that "all would be for the best." With commencement here, athletic honors being conferred and a round of dances and parties ahead, self-destruction was the furthest thing from his thoughts.

The story in the tragedy, as the authorities have reconstructed it, is as follows:

For almost a year the Amidon girl, student in the ninth grade of the Wellesley Junior High School, was wildly in love with the Mills boy, star athlete at the Wellesley High School and president of the junior class.

The boy was in love with the girl too, and was insanely jealous of her. The pair kept repeated love trysts. The rear of the Wellesley Hills station was one of their favorite meeting places, and from this place they were frequently driven by Michael McCourt, the station agent.

GIRL BECOMES DESPERATE.

The girl's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Amidon of No. 152 Washington street, Wellesley Hills, learning of their daughter's love affair, chided her and forbid her to become further involved, on account of her youth.

The boy, son of Mr. and Mrs. John K. Mills of No. 35 Riverdale road, Wellesley Farms, chafed that he was unable to marry the girl. He had no money, but when things reached an impasse he decided to leave school and home and strike out for himself.

The girl became desperate as a result of worrying over her love affair, while young Mills, having trouble with his father at home, handed in his books at school and announced he was going away.

It is believed he arranged with the girl for the final tryst in the woods off the Glen road, where they had frequently met.

NO THOUGHT OF TRAGEDY.

It is believed the boy had no thought of impending tragedy when he met his schoolgirl sweetheart at the edge of the woods. It is entirely possible that he had some vague thought of eloping with the girl if she would flee with him.

The girl, however, was convinced the tragedy was too much for her to stand. She went to her home from school and hastily penned a note to her mother:

"Dear Mother:

"I'm going away and not coming back. Love. Priscilla."

When the girl wrote "I'm going away" the authorities believe that then she had determined to take her own life for a moment later she secured a 32-calibre revolver belonging to her father and which was always kept in the house, fully loaded.

Several days before that a classmate of the suicide, and a frequent caller at the Amidon home, No. 152 Washington street, Wellesley Hills, asked Priscilla if she was going to the class supper.

"I am not going," Priscilla replied. "I am going away. By the night of the supper you will know why."

Concealing the weapon, the girl went out and met Mills. It is believed she kept the weapon concealed from her sweetheart until she had steeled herself to the rash act she had planned.

BOY PANIC STRICKEN.

It is likely she talked her affairs over with Mills, and when she was finally convinced of the hopelessness of their romance, and before the high school student could prevent her, she snatched the revolver from her dress and fired the shot through her left temple.

It is believed Mills became panic stricken. Here was the girl dying before his eyes. Panic stricken, it is believed he reached over, took the still smoking weapon from the helpless hand of the dying girl, and fired a bullet through his own forehead.

Persons who heard the shots, declare there was an interval of possibly half a minute between the first and second shots—just long enough for the boy to decide that death was the only way out for him.

The girl was unconscious, but Mills, semi-conscious, dragged himself to the road, a quarter of a mile away, where he was found.

When he was found, a trail of blood led the searchers to the clump of bushes where the girl lay. There was still life in the girl's body when the Newton hospital was reached, but she died a few moments later, without even regaining consciousness.

"I had to do it because she did," are the only words the boy has spoken since he has been in the hospital, but the police are convinced that they hold the key to the details of the tragedy.

An autopsy on the girl's body is being performed today.

BOTH FAMILIES SHOCKED.

Meanwhile, both families are so badly shocked they can give the police little or no aid.

The police have found a number of people to whom young Mills confided that he was going to leave home.

Walter Wright, a chum of Mills, told the police that Mills wanted to sell a cheap automobile he owned, for $40. He also declared that an hour before the tragedy, Mills had no thought of ending his own life, but talked of plans to attend a movie that evening with "Puss," his nickname for the Amidon girl.

In addition to the autopsy being conducted by Medical Examiner West, Inspector Michael Flemming of the State Police and the district attorney's office of Norfolk County are conducting a separate investigation.

HAS CHANCE TO RECOVER.

Young Mills, in a private room at the Newton hospital, is unguarded by the police. No charge has been preferred against him and in view of the finding of the medical examiner that the Amidon girl shot herself, it is unlikely that any action will be taken.

In Death Pact

Sterling Mills, Wellesley High School student, who shot self after his girl sweetheart, Priscilla Amidon, fifteen, ended her own life. Young Mills may die himself. He only says: "She made me do it."

AUTO ROBBERS CAUGHT, JAILED, IN 12 HOURS

Wilmington Youths Accused of Holding Up Couple in a Car; Taken at Gun Point

Twelve hours from the time they held up and robbed Ralph Knowles and Ethel Doyle, on Wilmington road, Burlington, setting them afoot and driving away with their machine, two Wilmington youths were convicted in Woburn Court today of highway robbery and larceny.

John R. Stokes, fifteen, of Main street, Wilmington, was sentenced to Concord Reformatory by Judge Jesse W. Morton, while the case of Fred Mosier, twenty, of Burlington avenue, Wilmington, was continued one week for disposition. Mosier has just completed a term at Concord.

Knowles, who lives on Wyman road, Wilmington, with Miss Doyle of Olive road, Burlington, were seated in a parked auto when the youths appeared.

With faces masked by handkerchiefs and with lead pipes in their hands, the thugs commanded the couple to leave the car. After $5.28 from Knowles the youths ordered their victims to "beat it," and drove away in the car.

Miss Doyle and Knowles later reported the robbery to Police Chief William J. Pollock of Burlington. Chief Pollock broadcast the number of the car to surrounding cities and towns. Motorcycle Officer Patrick J. Long of Reading finally captured the accused pair at the point of his revolver.

POLICE LAUNCH NEW DRIVE ON RUM; 3 HELD

Three men were arrested by the liquor squad in the South End and South Boston when the police headquarters snoopers turned their attention to these districts, after having been stymied on a press-agented visit to East Boston.

So well was the expected cleanup of East Boston press-agented that every place visited by the police across the harbor was as dry as dry could be.

The three more successful raids in the South End and South Boston, however, netted the police Thomas Guy and fifteen gallons of rum at No. 1251 Washington street; James Callahan at No. 1206 Washington street, with three pints, and Thomas King of No. 206 F street, where five gallons of liquor were found.

The men were charged with liquor law violations.

Members of the agronomy teachers' agriculture club permitted Mr. O'Neill to take their fingerprints.

They have agreed that France and Spain must quickly deliver an effectual series of blows against the turbulent Riffians of Morocco and so restore peace in northern Africa.

SHENANDOAH TO MAKE LOS ANGELES FLIGHT

Washington, June 10 (A.P.)—The dirigible Shenandoah will attempt a flight to Minnesota in place of the disabled Los Angeles, but the date for the cruise is indefinite.

Secretary Wilbur has directed that the Shenandoah make the trip as soon as possible.

The Shenandoah is to fly to Portland, Me., July 4 for the Governors' Conference there, but will make the Minnesota voyage before then if it can be inflated soon enough. Otherwise, the trip will follow the Portland flight.

Rubber Mills to Close

Woonsocket, June 10.—The Alice mill of the Woonsocket Rubber Company here and the plant in Millville, Mass., of the same concern, will close June 25 for three weeks. About 220 employes are affected. The plants are subsidiaries of the U. S. Rubber Company.

'Oh, I Couldn't Live on Alone!' Youth Sobs

"I LOVED HER! I couldn't live on alone after she killed herself."

Sterling Mills sobbed out these words today at the Newton Hospital when they pleaded for him to tell why he attempted to kill himself after Priscilla Amidon, his schoolgirl sweetheart, had committed suicide.

Over and over he said this. That was all he would say as to why he tried to die.

Back in Prison, Why?---By Donald Lowrie

Amazing Story of a Man's Struggle Against Temptations That Pulled Him Down to Die in a Cell

CHAPTER XLIII

"WELL, tell Johnson I've got Blackie's pardon all right," I said, exultantly. "But in my judgment it should be Osborne who should take the good news to him. Tell Johnson I sugged that."

An hour later I was speeding down the Hudson on a fast train. It was mid-afternoon. I was back at the prison, where I found Mrs. Field in great excitement. She insisted that we ought to advise Blackie at once of the pardon, and not wait for Osborne's return. "It will brace him up!" she exclaimed.

Blackie's Eyes Show Gratitude

I told her I had conceived what I considered a fine plan, and felt sure Osborne would agree to it. "Let's be patient," I urged. "Let's have Billy Duffy, Blackie's pal, give him the pardon, with Tom and you and myself and other friends all present. I don't think such a thing as one convict handing a pardon to another has ever happened in the prison history of the world, and Blackie, I know, will appreciate it." I finally made her see that my plan was good.

That night, when Osborne had returned, we all went up to Blackie's bedside together, and Duffy, with trembling voice, read the text of the pardons, and then reverently placed the documents under the dying man's pillow. Blackie was too weak to talk. Only his eyes showed his gratitude. It was indeed a case of "the pardon that came too late."

It was about 4 o'clock on the morning of March 29, 1915, when Blackie died, less than a week after receiving his pardon. I had been up along with Harry and Jack, until about 2 o'clock and when Duffy woke me and told me the end had come, I got up again.

We went down into the kitchen and made some black coffee and talked about what we should do. Osborne and Johnson were both absent from the prison, and I was virtually in charge. It was the first time in my life that I had faced the responsibility of making arrangements concerning a dead body. None of the boys seemed to have had any experience, either.

I knew Johnson was due back at the prison that morning early, so decided to go to New York and see Osborne, who was at the Belmont Hotel, having spoken in New York the night before, and scheduled to leave for Philadelphia at 5 o'clock, with his return to the prison fixed for that evening.

I advised Duffy not to disturb the body until the prison physician had seen it. In my room for a moment I swallowed a big drink of whisky. Then I was driven to the Canning station, where I caught the "flower" train for New York. The "flower" train went through each morning shortly before 5 o'clock, picking up freshly cut flowers from the numerous hothouse plants and nurseries all along the route, for delivery in the city. It carried one or two passenger coaches.

I arrived in New York shortly after 6—too early to disturb Tom. I decided to wait until 7:30 or 8 before calling him up. My understanding was that he would take the 10 o'clock Pennsylvania train for Philadelphia.

At first I had breakfast in mind. I was tired and unstrung. But instead of turning into the station restaurant I went down to the bar and had a drink of whisky. After a few minutes I took another. Then I began to think, or thought I did. Why disturb Tom at all? It would only distress him to learn of Blackie's death. What could he do in the matter that I couldn't do, anyway? There was really no sense in my having come to New York. I would take the next train back.

I had two or three more drinks and then returned to Sing Sing, arriving at the prison before 9 o'clock. Johnson had not returned. Blackie's body was still lying in the bed where he had died.

Recollection of a Lecture Engagement

I learned that someone had called up Mrs. Field, and that she was on her way to the prison from Brooklyn. Mrs. Field was very emotional. I knew there would be a scene. I felt it was necessary to have the remains removed before she got there.

I called up the undertaker at Ossining. His response was prompt. In less than half an hour he called and removed the body to his mortuary.

Spectacular Pageant of Colonial Days Big Feature of City's Anniversary

Overcast skies which frequently darkened the heavens today failed utterly to interfere with Quincy's celebration of her 300th birthday.

The success which attended the first presentation of the historical pageant depicting the history of Quincy gave added impetus to the celebration plans, if such were possible, and early today thousands of visitors began arriving in the city for the fourth day of the celebration.

Informal exercises in connection with the celebration will be held in a number of sections of the city throughout the day, but the big event on the program is the second performance of the pageant in Merrymount Park, scheduled for tonight.

On Saturday afternoon the big parade under the direction of Colonel Warren E. Sweetser will bring to Quincy the greatest naval and military display in the city's history.

The pageant is the outstanding feature of the tercentenary.

Virgina Tanner, well-known director in charge of the pageant and has evolved out of the history of Quincy perhaps the most brilliant reproduction that has ever been made of a New England city's progress from Plymouth Rock days to the present.

Episode 1 of the remarkable drama has to do with the leave-taking of Captain Wollaston from the Merrymount lighting post. He leaves affairs in the hands of Lieutenant Filcher, who is not nearly as popular with the colony.

"MYLES STANDISH" ARRIVES.

Thomas Morton, a renegade and freebooter, then steps into the picture and succeeds to the control of the post.

Then comes Captain Myles Standish, a representative of Governor William Bradford, to stamp out freebooting by Morton's crew. Morton's arrest and the disbanding of his merry gang follows.

In the next episode, entitled "The Antinomians," the establishment of religion in the colony by John Wheelwright, the first resident minister of the Chapel of Ease, the branch church of the First Church of Boston, is depicted.

Here, Ann Hutchinson, arrives after fleeing from Boston where she had been banished from the church on a charge of heresy and tells her story to the congregation after which she leaves to meet her husband in Rhode Island.

Action in the pageant then shows the part played by Quincy residents in the Revolutionary War and the sparkling romance of Dorothy "Q" and John Hancock.

SCENE OF INCORPORATION.

The rhythmic dances interspersed in the movements of the historical narrative interpreted the peaceful occupation of the settlers—spinning, planting, fishing—and were presented by local talent.

The signing of the Declaration of Independence was pictured in attractive manner.

Then came the scene showing the incorporation of Quincy, February 23, 1792 (Peoples of North and South Braintree discussing separation into different townships). Here descendants of foremost Colonial leaders portray parts taken by their ancestors in the moulding of the city's early growth.

Dissensions are cast aside, bells ring out and the proclamation is announced that a new community has been established during the time held down by no less a presence than John Quincy.

RECEPTION OF IMMIGRANTS.

The development of Quincy's industries are epitomized most graphically. In a scene, workmen typical of the residents from 1826 to 1840 crowd the stage. First comes the Irish. They are seen at work in the granite quarries. Follows Grizley Bryant, with the first railway carrying the granite. He promises to transport the entire output of the quarries to the tidewater at Neponset.

The pageant further shows the part played in the Civil War by the Hancock Guards, a corps of valiant Red Cross nurses from the city, who went forth as the Lincoln proclamation on April 15, 1861.

The grand finale of the pageant is the marvellous and colorful enactment of the spirit in which Quincy took unto herself the children of other nations, enfolding them all beneath the protecting wings of Old Glory.

YE COLONIAL DAYS IN QUINCY

One of the prettiest scenes in the Quincy pageant which depicts the history of the city since its settlement at the tercentenary celebration being held this week. CANADIANS MERGE 3 DENOMINATIONS

Toronto, June 10 (I.N.S.)—Eight thousand persons packed the arena today to witness the ceremonial introducing to the world the United Church of Canada. Into this new church were merged Methodists, Congregationalists and Unionist Presbyterians. The merger brought together 2,500,000 laymen and churchmen in 8,771 congregations.

RUM-RUNNER IS CAPTURED IN GUN BATTLE

A running gun battle off Scituate early today, in which six members of the Scituate coast guard exchanged shot for shot with two rum-runners in a gasoline motor boat, ended in the capture of the rum-runners and 500 cases of alcohol.

For five miles the chase continued. The coast guardsmen brought a machine gun into play, and the staccato rough of the weapon as it turned a stream of bullets in the direction of the rum-runners aroused scores of cottagers along the beach, and these were interested spectators of the chase.

The rum-runners were armed with rifles and revolvers, and from time to time they fired at the pursuing coast guard craft, but without effect.

As the coast guardsmen drew abreast, the rum-runners threw their weapons overboard and surrendered. They gave their names as Frank Sweeney and Frank Lewis, both of Lexington street, East Boston.

The coast guard crew was in charge of Captain J. J. Grimm.

The rum-runners had a motorboat equipped with a Liberty motor, but the superior speed of the government craft brought success to the hawk.

The rum-runners had apparently planned to land the cargo of alcohol at Scituate.

ARCHBISHOP CURLEY RAPS IMMIGRANT LAW

Baltimore, June 10 (A.P.)—Archbishop Michael J. Curley of the archdiocese of Baltimore, speaking at the Loyola College Commencement exercises here, attacked the present United States immigration law as being "backed by an absolute feeling of antagonism to the religion of the non-Nordic races."

"The law is founded on the alleged superiority of the Nordic races and is one of the most vicious pieces of legislation that has been enacted in America. The people which produced Dante, Raphael, Michelangelo and others are classed as inferior."

SAVED BY COOLIDGE PARDON

Goldberg, Convicted of Conspiracy in Jewel Case, Escapes Jail Term

A Presidential pardon for Lewis Goldberg, signed by President Coolidge, was delivered to Goldberg today by Assistant Federal Attorney Henry S. MacPherson.

But for the timely arrival of the pardon Goldberg would have gone to the Plymouth jail to serve a two-year sentence on a charge of conspiracy to conceal $45,000 worth of diamonds, assets in the bankrupt estate of the United Jewelry Corporation of Boston.

Lewis and Henry Goldberg and Louis Gluck were all indicted in December, 1922, and tried by Judge Morton in the Federal Court a few months later. They were all convicted and appealed to the Circuit Court of Appeals. Their sentence was confirmed by the higher court and Gluck and Henry Goldberg went to Plymouth for two years, less the usual parole.

Judge Morton granted a stay to Lewis Goldberg's sentence to permit him to support his brothers' dependents while Henry was in jail. In the meantime former Federal Attorney Boaz S. Allott, who prosecuted the men in the conspiracy, got hold of some new evidence which convinced him that Lewis Goldberg was not the guilty member of the plot, but a tool of the conspirators. He told Judge Morton the facts and the Judge forwarded them to President Coolidge with a recommendation for a pardon, which arrived in today's mail.

In the Fall of 1922 Gluck was riding from Springfield to Hartford in his automobile with $85,000 worth of diamonds, selling to retailers. He was found bound and gagged in Longmeadow by a truckman, with his auto ditched. He told of assault and robbery and a little later his firm went into bankruptcy. An investigation by government agents resulted in the arrest of Gluck and the Goldberg brothers.

LEGION TO HELP.

"The assembly will be held some time between 12 m. and 9 p. m. on the 4th of July, and a report will be forwarded to this office in accordance with instructions to be furnished later.

"In all localities where there is a National Guard unit, the American Legion and Naval Militia officers there will be designated as chairman of the committee on Defense Day and is hereby so designated.

"The American Legion has been asked to designate chairmen in localities where there is no National Guard unit.

"Notices are being sent to all American Legion posts, Spanish War veterans, A. O. H. posts, former State Guard organizations and to draft boards requesting their co-operation in a grand patriotic demonstration during the day.

PARADES ARE FAVORED.

"Arrangements for local celebrations will be left in the hands of the local chairmen. Parades and other demonstrations are optional.

"If parades are held commanding officers may permit civilians and former State Guard units to parade with them, whether uniformed or not.

"Local chairmen are requested to notify the adjutant-general of the program adopted by them and of the number of people who participated in this patriotic demonstration."

Two Buds of Coming Winter Season Make Bows to Society

Robert Saltonstalls of Readville Give Garden Party in Daughter's Honor This Afternoon

Betty Alden

TWO BUDS OF THE 1925-26 WINTER made their bows to society this afternoon. They are Miss Caroline S. Saltonstall and Miss Harriet Lee Saltonstall, youthful daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Saltonstall of Readville.

MR. AND MRS. SALTONSTALL gave a garden party at their Readville home for the two young girls. The Misses Saltonstall received with their mother, and some twenty young girls of their set presided over the tea cups.

OF THE TWENTY some are sisters bids-to-be of the Misses Saltonstall, and some are still of the sub-debutante age and belong to the Milton Academy crowd where Miss Harriet and Miss Caroline spent a portion of their school days.

DEBUTANTE WHITE, crepe de chine and frothy tulle, worn by the two buds, and a costume of soft ecru lace worn by Mrs. Saltonstall were typically Summer-like, as they received their many guests in the garden.

TODAY'S GARDEN PARTY was but a preliminary taste of the real joys to come, a taste of the more formal entertaining which will be in order during the Winter season, when the calendar fairly scintillates.

SUCH A STRENUOUS round as the debutante has to look forward to! And gleaming bright in the early season is a ball to be given for the Misses Saltonstall, who share honors then with their cousin from New York, Miss Rosamond Auchincloss.

MRS. SALTONSTALL and Mrs. Charles Auchincloss, mother of Miss Rosamond Auchincloss, are sisters. Mrs. Saltonstall was Caroline Stevenson and beside the two debutante daughters there is a young son, William G. Saltonstall.

THE SALTONSTALLS have a wide-spread country estate down on the shores of Buzzards Bay, at Pocasset. Hither they plan to go very shortly, now that the two buds of the family are launched. Their place is on Wing's Neck, and they will probably spend the Summer there.

YELLOW AND WHITE, with touches of black velvet, was the gay and effective color motif Miss Helen Hamlin chose to adorn her attendants when she married Leighton Brewer of Park avenue, in the Lady Chapel of Emmanuel Church, New York, yesterday morning.

THE SEXTET of attendants were Miss Mary Ord, Miss Margery Richardson, Miss Martha Bigelow, Miss Alice Herrick, Miss Edith Parker and Mrs. George Richmond Fearing, Jr. Avera Hazelip, Miss Katherine R. Hamlin, the bride's sister, was honor maid.

FLOCKS OF YELLOW and white, a design of roses against a background of white with yellow streamers from the shoulders, and leghorn chapeaux with crowns of black velvet and enormous yellow roses joined on the brim, made joyously blithe spot of color in the lovely small chapel.

THE BRIDE, the central figure in the ceremonial, wore a gown of rich deep ivory satin, with narrow court train beneath a veil of Rose Point lace.

A DRAPED EFFECT of the lace on the skirt front was held with a large white rose, and the veil was bound to the hair in a girlish mode with a single band of lace. Altogether she was a very lovely and very youthful bride.

SHE IS THE daughter of Edward Hamlin, now of the Hotel Puritan. Mr. Hamlin gave his daughter in marriage, and read Clergymen officiated. Dr. Elwood Worcester of Emmanuel Church and the Rev. Endicott Peabody of Groton.

TO GEORGE EMERSON BREWER, JR., went best man duties, and the usher squad included Edward Hamlin, Jr., and Stuart E. Elliott, both of Boston; Winant P. Johnson of Washington and J. Carter Stewart of Louisville.

YOUNG NEW YORKERS in the corps were Lloyd K. Garrison, Grenville T. Anderson and H. Safford Sattus. The bridegroom is a son of Dr. George Emerson Brewer of New York. His college is Yale, the class of 1920.

MR. AND MRS. BREWER are to live in New York, their home to be in Park avenue with Mr. Brewer, at No. 410. They will be at home to their friends in October.

THE BRIDE WAS to have been presented two Winters ago, the same year in which her attendants

VICTIMS' PRIDE AIDS STOCK FAKERS

Too Few Fight to Get Their Money Back, Fraud Expert Declares

Crooked stock brokers will remain in business just as long as only one man out of every ten defrauded fights until he gets his money back, Jerome F. Collins, an official of the Bureau for the Investigation of Business Frauds, New York City, told members of the Boston Rotary Club at their Wednesday luncheon at the Boston City Club.

"Sales of worthless stocks have been particularly large in the radio field," he said, "but oil and mining and industrial stocks of no value except the paper they are printed on have been sold easily to gullible investors.

CALLED ON TO FIGHT.

"The district attorneys, the police, in fact all public officials are doing all that is possible to combat this great economic evil which takes a yearly toll of $500,000, but they can not do more until foolish investors swallow what they regard as pride and decide to fight.

"What does a man do when a suit he buys as wool turns out to be cotton. He neatly massacres the man who sold it to him, gets a new suit or his money back. What does a man who has invested hundreds of dollars in a worthless stock proposition do. He charges it off to profit and loss because he fears his neighbor might josh him.

"Worthless stock is worthless only as long as its owner remains inactive. If he starts a fuss and kicks up a row, the broker who sold it to him may be made to make restitution to hush up the noise.

GIVES BACK SOME CASH.

"We have found it to be a fact that the crooked broker often puts one-third to one-tenth of the money he takes in aside to settle suits made against him. You can see why the crooked broker stays in business. Even if he gives back a third he still has a far greater sum than the honest business man to work on."

Mr. Collins advised his listeners consult their bankers, an old established brokerage house, their realty club, his bureau, or the Boston Better Business Commission before making an investment which they thought might in any way be shady.

CROWDS CHEER 8,000 CADETS ON MARCH

Review on Common Follows Parade of the Boston High School Boys

Through streets massed with cheering thousands, to the stirring strains from thirteen bands and bugle corps, Boston's High School Cadets marched today in their annual parade, postponed last week because of the heat.

Swinging along 8,000 strong heads up and ranks aligned, the martial appearance of the boys drew volley after volley of applause from the crowds along the line of march.

Reviewed as they marched at the City Hall, school committee headquarters and the State House, the Cadets took part in a regimental review on the Common which wound up the proceedings.

There were twelve cadet regiments, with 188 companies, headed by Nathaniel J. Young, director of physical training of the Boston Public Schools, and Lieutenant-Colonel Charles A. Ranlett, junior master of military drill.

LINE OF TWO MILES.

Starting from English High School on Montgomery street, the parade proceeded through Clarendon street to St. James avenue, to Park square, to Boylston, Tremont, Bromfield, Washington, School and Beacon street to the Common, the line of march being more than two miles in length.

The cadets got under way at 9:50, and everywhere found cheering throngs waiting for them. Tremont street was crowded on both sides, Bromfield and School streets were jammed with shouting humanity, and a large gathering was at hand at the State House.

Mayor Curley reviewed the parade from a stand in front of City Hall, and was accompanied by State Commander Henry L. Comey of the G. A. R., Wilfred A. Weatherbee, national senior vice-commander, G. A. R.; Commander Frank L. Nagle of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, Adjutant E. J. Holmes of George J. Whitten Camp, Spanish War Veterans; General John H. Dunn, national commander Veterans of Foreign Wars; members of the Boston City Council and heads of city departments and James T. Williams, Jr.

BANDS SERENADE MAYOR.

At the left of the stand facing the mayor was the bugle and drum corps of the Martin Grammar School dressed in white trousers, red coats and white caps. Opposite this outfit was the drum and bugle corps of the Richard Olney Grammar School in khaki.

They alternated in furnishing music during the periods when regiments were passing. After the parade had disappeared up Beacon street, the two drum corps united in serenading Mayor Curley in the yard of City Hall, receiving his compliments for the excellence of their performance.

At the State House the parade was reviewed by Governor Fuller and members of his staff including Adjutant General Jesse F. Stevens, Attorney General Jay R. Benton and Commissioner of Corrections Sanford Bates. Two officials of the Japanese government who are inspecting Massachusetts prisons and are the guests of Commissioner Bates, also were on the reviewing stand, as was Sergeant-at-Arms Charles B. Holt and department heads.

As the parade passed the school committee building on Beacon st. it was reviewed by Dr. John A. Ceconi, director of School Hygiene, on whose suggestion it was postponed last week. Posted at intervals along the line of march were U. S. Army officers as observers.

REVIEWED ON COMMON.

The Cadets swung on to the Common at the corner of Beacon and Charles street to find fully 10,000 persons drawn up four & fill on which stood members of the school committee, Superintendent Jeremiah E. Burke, the assistant superintendent and head masters.

Encircling the field on which the regimental review took place were the high school girls, rank after rank each displaying the colors of her school, in tossing banners and gay sashes. There was the light and dark blue of English High, the purple of the Latin School, the orange and black of Charlestown, blue and gray of High School of Commerce and the red and black of Dorchester mingled with the others.

While the review, carried out as smartly as many National Guard outfits could do it, was going on, the bands massed and furnished inspiring music.

At 1 o'clock in the Parker House the annual luncheon to the School Committee, superintendent, assistant superintendent, head masters and field officers of the cadets was tendered by Mayor Curley, to which editors of the newspapers were invited.

Canton, China, June 10 (A.P.).—All the foreigners have been evacuated from the danger zone.

Heavy fighting has been in progress between Cantonese and Yunnanese forces at Canton. Dispatches said four Americans, including two women, who attempted to escape from the fighting zone in a boat flying the American flag, were fired upon by Yunnanese machine gunners, and that one of the women, Mrs. Frank Crampton, was wounded in the arm.

Americans crossing the river into the foreign settlement at Canton cruised into the line of fire, but were able to escape without injury. In the fighting, buildings along the waterfront at Canton were damaged by gunfire.

JUDGE RESIGNS JOB; PAY IS TOO SMALL

Because his salary is too small, Judge Charles F. Perkins, for many years presiding justice of the Bronkline Municipal Court, has decided to resign from his office.

He notified Governor Fuller today.

The salary, $2,000 a year, is much less than many practicing lawyers receive, Judge Perkins told the Governor.

The judge has frequently appeared before committees of the Legislature in favor of an increase in the salaries of court officials.

HAIRDRESSERS CALL BOBBER NOT A BARBER

Newark, N. J., June 10 (A.P.).—Newark Hairdressers Association has engaged counsel to present arguments to Vice Chancellor Howell that a bobber who bobs a woman's hair is not a barber.

Virginia Gentile, a Summit bobber, was sued by Victor Cocco, a barber of the same town, who alleged that in bobbing women's hair Miss Gentile violated an agreement not to do any barber work in the Summit.

Announcement was made today that the hair dressers' association had espoused the cause of Gentile.

GASSING OF CITIES "ROT," SAYS ADMIRAL GLEAVES

Washington, June 10 (A.P.).—Statements that gaseous fog drops are horrible that would poison cities were characterized as "utter rot" by Rear-Admiral Robert Gleaves, retired, in a Henry Pitt address here today. When the "utter radical" makes any more statements, he said, the ignorant inconsequential authority that it would require 50,000 tons of such gas to poison the inhabitants, the inhabitants of the District of Columbia.

MACKEY HEIRESS TO WED SON OF POOR IMMIGRANT

wife of the eminent surgeon is expected to make a social sensation next autumn. Although she has been with the Astors and Vanderbilts, it is announced that the wedding of the announcement was the gaining of her richest clients.

Mr. Mackay opposed the match with vigor. He engaged private detectives to delve into Berlin's past and their reports indicated that he was a well-mannered and respectful young man.

SOUGHT INTERVIEW.

He sought and held an interview with the young artist. He talked of his family, his religion and told of the unhappiness which most times ensues from intermarriage of those of different creeds.

Berlin drew himself to his full height and voiced his pride in his own manhood—his fineness. He spoke with pride of his own religion which he said afforded comfort to many of the Mackays, and to the end he said he would be willing, if necessary, to renounce his faith and embrace hers to insure the sanction of the church and the happiness of his fiancee.

Mr. Mackay, it is reported, said to Berlin: "If you will go on as I dreamed my daughter and pass my millions to Katherine, her name will be Mackay."

"In that event," Irving Berlin is reported to have replied, "I will have to give up a couple of millions as a wedding present."

Facing so stubborn a resistance from his daughter and her wooer, Mr. Mackay agreed for time. He ordered his daughter to go abroad with her mother in the hope that she would escape.

The head of the Postal Telegraph & Cable Co. now has a friend and host in the Prince of Wales, extended himself to make Ellin's European trip a wonderful success. He was feted and dazzled by the noblest of European blood.

APPEALED TO POPE.

When she and her mother went to Rome they sought an audience at the Vatican. She dressed in severe black, that is prescribed for such an event, went alone, was received with extreme formality and told of her fate, and it is related that when she emerged, she protested the bit of writing to sanction the marriage of Ellin Mackay to Irving Berlin.

With this precious document in her possession she arranged to cut short her tour of the Continent so that she might whisper the glad tidings in the ear of her fiance.

Meanwhile, plunged into the depths of despair by the separation, Berlin penned the most plaintive love songs of his career. The most successful of his many, many song successes, "What'll I do?" His feelings are pictured in the opening lines:

"Alone in this romance divine,
"My broken and can never be mended."

About the time he was finishing and when his heart was near the breaking point in spite of the fact his name was on every lip along Broadway and he was feted on every side, his fiancee was speeding to him.

When she stepped down the gangplank and into the arms of her anxious father the pier porters, almost every one was either whistling or singing the song he had dedicated to her, "What'll I Do?"

The pleading of Miss Mackay fell on deaf ears. Even her mother, the divorced wife of the Postal Company head, was powerless to help the romance of which she approved quite heartily, and although she had the impression which she had expected would clear away every obstacle she was as far from her goal as before.

Nevertheless, in spite of everything and every device tried by Mackay to thwart their love dreams they grew more and more infatuated as the weary months wore on and their occasional meetings served as fuel to the fire of their passion.

The summer came, and Miss Mackay was busy with her social engagements; either at the palatial Mackay homes at Roslyn or Newport, and occasionally they met. The Fall came and with it the Prince of Wales, who was entertained at the Mackay residence by Mr. Mackay and his daughter, who was hostess. Berlin was a guest at one of the dinners for the Prince.

GOES TO PALM BEACH.

In the winter Miss Mackay went to Palm Beach, where she plunged into the social whirl in an effort to forget temporarily the ache in her heart, and soon after Berlin found his way to the southland. There they golfed and swam and enjoyed a fleeting period of bliss.

This was broken by urgent telegrams from New York demanding Berlin's presence here to straighten out tangles in the Music Box, most of which he had written and which was being staged by him and Sam H. Harris.

Blue and despondent over the separation, Berlin's thoughts turned constantly to the south and so one night while he was sitting sadly in his apartment there came into his mind the idea for that haunting melody "All Alone," in which he wistfully tells of his longing for her.

Berlin's rapid return to Palm Beach caused many of his associates and friends to wonder. They thought he was hastening back to avoid the chill of New York and to work on new melodies and new ideas for the next edition of the Music Box Revue. But very few guessed the real reason.

It was while the romance was in this precarious state that his lifestory appeared. It had been written by his friend and confidant and told of his amazing rise from a Bowery cafe, where he worked as a singing waiter, to the proud position he now holds.

pilot and a mechanic, and Lieutenant Commander R. E. Byrd, the Polar Commander, will act as navigator. His companion in the NA-1, the first plane, Chief Machinists' Mate Floyd Bennett, will act as pilot. Lieutenant M. A. Schur will pilot the NA-2, with Machinists' Mate N. C. Mold as mechanic. The NA-3 will be piloted by Chief Boatswain F. E. Reber, with Machinists' Mate First Class A. Rocheville as pilot.

Commander Byrd voiced the sentiments of his companions when he said that all were pleased with their prospective trip. Believing that Roald Amundsen and his party are safe and will be found, Lieutenant Byrd said he felt certain the explorers will be heard from again. If they are not heard from before the MacMillan expedition's planes begin their flights into the upper polar regions, he thinks they will be sighted by the Americans.

Admiral W. A. Moffett, chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics of the Navy Department, who has been doing his best to meet the wishes of Congressman James A. Gallivan of Boston and the MacMillan party, to send either the Los Angeles or the Shenandoah, the giant dirigibles, to Boston next week to escort the expedition to Maine, decided because of repeated accidents to the Los Angeles he will have to change his program.

In a letter to Congressman Gallivan he said that the limited supply of helium makes it possible at present to keep only one of the two dirigibles inflated. As a result it is absolutely impossible to meet the date of June 12, but arrangements have been completed to have the Shenandoah fly over Boston July 4.

SAYS ONLY NAVAL MEN MAY DRINK ON ISLANDS

Washington, June 10 (A.P.).—Asserting that only a naval officer may drink in the Virgin Islands, former Federal Judge Lucius J. M. Malmin has arrived in Washington to wage a fight for civil government for the islands, now under naval jurisdiction.

Prohibition laws are enforced on the island, he told Secretary Wilbur, under the guns of the Navy. The possessions, he asserted, are "practically going back to the bush and becomes less and less valuable to the United States."

NATICK GROCERY TEAM DRIVER SHOOTS SELF

Natick, June 10.—Irving Hartford, fifty-one, driver for M. P. Young, grocer, was found dead in the cellar of his home at No. 46 Washington street, with a bullet wound in his right temple.

Medical Examiner Glass said that death resulted from suicide.

HERE'S EVOLUTION OF OLD SOL'S BURN

First picture is George before going to Worcester; second is after third day; third shows him all swelled up, and fourth is an exact reproduction of his face as the sun left it.

ARREST 32 IN BLOODY KLAN RIOTING

have been injured in the fighting, which was not quelled until twenty State police patrolmen had charged the baiting crowds, only three were hurt severely enough to be treated by physicians as far as police were able to learn. They were treated at the Worcester police surgery.

They said they were innocent victims, being the target for missiles while passing through the town in trucks.

USE CLUBS AND STONES.

Everett Rice, nineteen, was arrested today charged with assault with intent to kill and carrying dangerous weapons. Police alleged that some time after the rioting he threw his neighborhood into excitement by firing three shots at three men who were in the vicinity of his home.

Fifteen clubs, twelve lead pipes, pieces of rubber hose and a revolver, the weapons alleged to have been used in the battle, were seized.

The trouble in the Acre District started shortly before midnight, when a procession of more than 300 klansmen's cars was suddenly attacked by the "antis." As the first car to have in sight the crowd rushed it, throwing bricks and swinging clubs.

Lieut. Roy Kimball and twenty State troopers patrolled the grounds surrounding the Brewster Field in Berlin, where the meeting was held, were escorting the klan machines through the district when the riot started.

PRISONERS FREED.

Occupants of the klan machines jumped to the ground as the antis rushed them and within a short time numerous fist fights were in progress while the State troopers vainly tried to keep order.

Clubs and rocks flew right and left, windows were shattered, and shrieks of women in nearby houses contributed to the disorder. Flower pots, porch chairs and other things movable were used in the battle. The roadway was strewn with rocks, clubs and broken glass.

State policemen were brushed aside. Several were knocked down as the crowd realized first attempts of the officers to keep order. Several men placed under arrest were freed as the crowd descended on the arresting patrolman.

THREE HURT IN AUTO CRASH AT SHREWSBURY

Shrewsbury, June 10 (A.P.).—In a collision between a sedan driven by Felix Comeau, No. 593 Tremont street, Boston, and a small motor truck, driven by Gerald Lavin, aged sixteen, of this town, today, three occupants of the truck were badly hurt, but the three occupants of the Comeau car escaped injury. The injured men are Lavin, Daniel Murphy, thirty, and Arthur Olson, twenty-two, the latter two of Worcester. They were taken to a Worcester hospital.

TRUE, the savings bank deposits and the amount of savings bank deposits have increased more rapidly than the number of bootleg whiskey drinkers in insane asylums. One may offset the other, although, after all, the whole duty and purpose of man is not to deposit money in savings banks, admirable as such deposits are.

Wilbur Links Biblical and Natural History

Durham, N. C., June 10 (A.P.).—Some of the questions involved in discussions of the Bible and evolution were touched upon by Secretary of the Navy Wilbur in a prepared commencement address today at Duke University on the subject, "Common Sense."

Mr. Wilbur said: "We need common sense in religion."

"If the Bible is the inspired word of God, as we believe," he added, "then He created the universe and left the record of that creation forever inscribed upon all created things. There are at least two divine books—the Holy Bible, on whose pages are inscribed the doings and sayings of holy men, and the book of Nature. A part of this historical story is plainly written upon the geological strata which circumscribe the globe. Common sense suggests that these two records be considered together, and that to reject and utterly ignore either is equally foolish.

GERARD IS CLEARED OF CONTEMPT OF COURT

New York, June 10 (A.P.).—James W. Gerard, former Ambassador to Germany, was cleared today of the charge of contempt of the Supreme Court of New York, based on his failure to appear for examination.

Mr. Gerard had been summoned in connection with a suit against the National Democratic Committee. He appeared today before Supreme Court Justice Tierney and announced his readiness to submit to examination tomorrow.

STUDENTS MARCH OUT AT MEDFORD HIGH FIRE

All students and teachers in Medford High School filed out of the building in an orderly manner today during a small fire believed to have started in the basement by some student who threw a lighted match or cigarette into sawdust on the floor. The fire drill signal was sounded when smoke from the cellar entered a classroom on the first floor. The janitors had extinguished the blaze by the time firemen arrived. Damage was estimated at $5.

SUN GIVES MAN BOILED-OWL ASPECT

The first class in sun and sunburn was called today and not until then was it revealed that both pupil and teacher was our own Gentleman George.

George has grown a bit larger since last week, a bit fuller of fore like a man on a bicycle pump diet or like one who has sought the friendship of the bees and has found them not platonic.

As a matter of plain but puffy fact, the officinable George resembled remarkably the photos of the prisoner before eating the hearty breakfast.

It all came about because the Honorable George, who is George S. Woodruff, manager of the New England Bureau, Still Department of the International Newsreel Corporation, got pictorial foolfits developing into sun poisoning.

HE WEARS NO HAT.

George, in fact, covered the National Open Golf Tournament at Worcester for three days. On the first day he wore a hat during his camera labors on the links.

Many hardy souls were without hats, however, and the Honorable George figured that his skull and epidermis were just as thick as the rest. On the second and third days he wore no hat.

Then George came back to the office—and he wore no hat. But he wore no hat these succeeding days for the satisfactory reason that it wouldn't fit on.

George's physiognomy had taken on the semblance of a cream puff, hot out of the oven, only it was hotter on the outside than on the inside. His face could have been rated in appearance somewhere between a Summer squash and a balloon tire.

LIKE BOILED OWL.

Through two little slits his eyes peered out on the world over puffy rolls of heated flesh and his forehead took on the hue of an egg yolk that is not so well. The Honorable George couldn't even shave.

At the Relief Hospital they told George he had sun poisoning and they laved him with picric acid, giving him some of the stuff for further treatments. Now George is slowly coming back out of the puff and is beginning to look less like a boiled owl.

Just to help our neighbors along we asked Dr. Edmund T. Wilson, assistant superintendent at the City Hospital, today just what sun poisoning is and how to treat it.

The genial doctor said a weak solution of picric acid or carron oil which is a mixture of equal parts of linseed oil and limewater—will do most to relieve the burn.

KID M'COY TELLS OF "CORKSCREW" PUNCH

San Quentin, Cal., June 10 (A.P.).—Norman Selby, otherwise known as Kid McCoy, has made his debut in literature. In the last issue of the prison publication, the San Quentin Bulletin, McCoy described how he invented the "corkscrew" punch which helped him floor such formidable opponents as Peter Maher, Tom Sharkey and Joe Choynski.

Studying a German pistol while in South Africa thirty years ago the "Kid" wrote, he noticed how the rifled groove made the bullet effective. He applied this principle with much success, he said. McCoy is serving a sentence for manslaughter as a result of the death of Mrs. Theresa Mors of Los Angeles.

GANG LEADER'S COFFIN IS SILVER

Display for Latest Chicago Feud Victim to Rival That of O'Banion

Chicago, June 10 (A.P.).—Chicago's gangland again is planning a lavish funeral for one of its fallen leaders. Walter O'Donnell, bootlegger, who was slain mysteriously in a suburban roadhouse last Sunday.

Eight of O'Donnell's brothers are busy planning for his funeral on Friday, and "Spike," the leader of the O'Donnell gang, predicted it would be in as great style as those of Don O'Banion and Angelo Genna, prominent underworld figures killed in recent months.

A huge silver and steel casket which weighs 1,000 pounds and cost several thousand dollars now holds O'Donnell's body.

Walter O'Donnell will be the ninth prominent gangster to be buried in Chicago in recent years. Each of the nine was slain.

Arthur Youngreen, former prohibition agent, and now claiming to be a real estate broker, was arrested today by Sheriff Peter M. Hoffman in connection with the fracas which resulted in the killing of Henry Hassmiller and the fatal wounding of O'Donnell.

This action was taken when the sheriff became convinced that Youngreen did not testify correctly when questioned concerning a death plot against another former dry agent, John Pronles, hatched by O'Donnell.

ITALIAN EDITOR RAPS BULLARD MEMOIRS

Charges Malice in General's Criticism of Italy's Part in World War

Charging that there exists "a hidden malice between the lines in his description of the activities of the Italians," Alexander Bevilacqua, editor of the Italian Review of Providence, attacked General Bullard's memoirs today, in a communication to The Boston Evening American.

With his letter, the editor enclosed a copy of his English-printed article, a newspaper, containing a news story on the memoirs and a biting editorial attack on the General.

"Of course, General Bullard makes no direct statement," said Editor Bevilacqua, "but to the discerning eye it is steeped in prejudice, and seems purposely written to put the Italians in a bad light.

NOT A WITNESS.

"Hundreds of miles away from the Italian front (which, incidentally, was longer than the front held by the combined armies of France and England), he describes conditions in a way that is a direct contradiction to the descriptions given by eye witnesses.

"Time and again the Hearst papers have lauded the Italians for their exploits during the war. Bullard makes repeated allusions to the fortitude, intelligence and the valor of the Italian soldier. In view of this, one cannot reasonably claim that your paper has a share in the studied calumnies of Gen Bullard.

"Hungary, torn with the humiliation of defeat, suffering from lack of equipment, without supplies, without ammunition, with terrible visions of Fair Italy crushed beneath the savage feet of a cruel invader, the Italian soldiers fought with a grimness and a determination that has never been equalled.

SENTIMENT AROUSED.

"I depend on your sense of justice to give this matter a complete airing. I should be pleased to get your viewpoint, Mr. Hearst's viewpoint, the public's viewpoint on the matter. Sentiment against him is already at a high point.

"I sincerely feel that nobody can and nobody should be allowed to make insinuations against Italy's part in the World War. The heroism of Italian soldiers is a historical tradition, dating back to the legions of Rome that conquered the world."

1ST CORPS AREA AVIATION HEAD LAUDS FLIGHT

Believes Boston American's "Sealed Orders" Race Serves Valuable Purpose

The $500 Prize Air Flight Contest of the Boston Evening American, in which Massachusetts National Guard officers will compete, as one of the features of the 150th anniversary celebration of Bunker Hill Day, June 17, was lauded by Captain L. R. Knight, Aviation Officer of First Corps Area, United States Army.

Captain Knight, who saw service in France during the World War as a colonel in the aviation service, and was instrumental in establishing the Boston Airport, believes the Evening American's Prize Flight Contest will serve a valuable purpose.

He has looked over sites for landing fields in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island and Connecticut, for the United States government, and is of the opinion that a big future is ahead for aviation.

The statement of Captain Knight relative to the Prize Flight Contest under the auspices of the Evening American follows:

By L. R. KNIGHT,
Captain, Air Service, First Corps Area Air Officer.

The Boston Evening American's "Sealed Orders" flight by the Massachusetts National Guard Air Service Squadron will be of greatest value to the members of the organization taking part from the standpoint of training in cross-country flying. The fact that the orders are sealed more nearly simulates war conditions than any other method possible, for in the time of war missions are always more or less a surprise and are over country not so well-known to the pilots.

To receive their orders in the air, with no one to consult with, the pilot is put "on his own" and the manner in which he performs the mission will demonstrate just how well he has been trained.

The contest feature is especially valuable, as competition is the basis of success in all big business enterprises, as well as those of pleasure. All big business has been founded on competition.

The Boston Evening American's interest in aviation is well demonstrated in this contest, as it shows its desire to encourage and assist the Air Service in its struggle for its proper recognition.

It is a great pleasure for me to endorse this movement and I shall watch its results with great interest, as I am sure it will result in much good to this organization and be an incentive to other air units, as well as other public-spirited organizations to assist such worthy causes.

Many Boston society women, who will sponsor the flight contest as patronesses, are vitally interested in the outcome of the Bunker Hill Day project as well as in aviation in general. One of them is Mrs. Charles P. Greenough, 2d., of Boston, who will serve as a patroness of the Evening American's venture.

"I think the proposed prize flight contest of the Evening American is a most excellent thing," said Mrs. Greenough, "and it will give me much happiness to assist."

Other prominent Boston women who will serve as patronesses are Mrs. Theodike D. Howe, Mrs. Horace Morison, Miss Hope Gray, Mrs. L. Vernon Briggs, Mrs. B. H. Bristow Draper, Mrs. Nathaniel Ayer, Mrs. Benjamin F. Pitman, Mrs. Curtis Guild, Mrs. Timothee Adamowski, Mrs. Clarence R. Edwards, Mrs. Edward L. Logan, Mrs. A. E. Jones, Mrs. Channing H. Cox, Mrs. Walter I. Badger, Jr., Mrs. Walter M. Pratt, Mrs. Maynard Ladd, Mrs. B. Parker Bremer, Mrs. Gaspar G. Bacon and Mrs. Mary Fay Dabney.

A committee composed of Massachusetts National Guard officers is working out details of the Prize Flight Contest and expects to give all the aviators interesting war-time problems to work out on Bunker Hill Day. These problems will include not only fast flying but also sketches of Bunker Hill and the crowds nearby, when the pilots guide their machines to that point; possibly sketches of railroad facilities in Framingham and Brockton and written reports. The prizes will be awarded on the entire performance of each plane, including the work of the observers.

The committee working out these details include Major Charles H. Woolley, Captain Harold B. Willis, Captain Clarence E. Hodge, Captain Louis E. Boutwell and Lieutenant George Sprague, all of whom are in the Massachusetts National Guard.

GOODWIN RAPS DISCHARGE OF M'ISAAC, JR.

The action of Judge Michael J. Murray of the Boston Municipal Court, in discharging William D. McIsaac, son of Attorney Daniel V. McIsaac, on charges of drunkenness, operating an automobile while under the influence of liquor, operating without a license and operating after revocation, has been bitterly assailed by Registrar of Motor Vehicles Frank A. Goodwin.

"This is only another illustration," declares the registrar, "of how some can escape punishment while others pay the penalty for the same offense."

At the same time the registrar delivered his latest blast against the courts, he announced that he would not revoke the license of Attorney McIsaac on the charge that the lawyer had permitted his son to drive his automobile when the latter's license had been revoked.

At a private hearing before the Registrar the attorney stated that he had not given his son permission to drive the machine and was in New York City when the trouble occurred.

Reviewing the case of young McIsaac the registrar said that the case was continued from May 13 until May 29, on which date it was tried before Judge Murray in the Municipal Court. McIsaac had previously been convicted in the Hingham Court on July 29, 1924, of operating an automobile while under the influence of liquor, and his license was revoked on August 6.

McIsaac was arrested on State street about 3 o'clock in the morning after he had been warned by a police officer several times not to operate the car because of his alleged condition, it was testified to by the officers.

The MAGIC of GASOLINE

You've often stopped to watch some powerful truck dragging its ponderous load up some long, steep slope. Alive! it seems. Throbbing—snorting—leaning into the pull like a giant's horse! Meeting every challenge with a determination not to be denied!

A tribute to the magic of gasoline! Compare its power—with that of a man, for instance. How many men would have been required to pull the same loaded truck up the same grade?

And yet, gasoline's full might is never seen. For in the processes and mechanisms between fuel tank and road contact are many power-wasting factors which science and invention have not yet conquered.

Of these factors, exhaust losses, cooling and radiation losses and friction losses are the greatest.

But here's one thing you can do: Use good gasoline—fuel that is high in energy and gives up that energy easily and fully under the varying operating conditions your motor encounters.

Atlantic Gasoline is the product of years of scientific study. It has followed the progress of the automobile ever since its swaddling days. In that time Atlantic engineers have seen countless refining formulae, fuel mixtures and substitutes for gasoline appear—and disappear. And they have yet to see the all-round superior of Atlantic Gasoline as it is refined today.

No other motor fuel is more nicely formulated than Atlantic Gasoline. None gives up its energy more freely and completely. None functions more efficiently under every speed, load and temperature. Atlantic is clean. No sulphur to pit your valves.

No acid to eat the metal of your motor or carburetor. No detonating fuel knocks to pound your motor bearings. No rapid accumulation of carbon.

Atlantic is always dependable—and you can buy it most anywhere.

SHANGHAI SHIPPING STRIKE BECOMES WORSE

Shanghai, June 10 (A.P.)—The shipping strike here is gradually becoming worse, necessitating the tying up of steamers. Ocean-going vessels also are taking on less cargo.

TAMMANY HEAD ABSENT AT $25,000 HYLAN FEAST

New York, June 10 (A.P.)—Zest was added today to discussion of the impending mayoralty campaign by the revelation that George W. Olvany, leader of Tammany Hall, had not attended a dinner to Mayor Hylan at the Waldorf. The press was excluded from the dinner, but Olvany was announced as one of the guests. Inquirers at his home were told he had been injured Sunday playing golf. The dinner, given by City Chamberlain Philip Berolsheimer, created much attention because of its lavish scale. Some papers opposing Mayor Hylan say it cost $25,000, or $166 a plate.

MEXICO SOON TO BUILD 12,000 MILES OF ROAD

Mexico City, June 10 (A.P.)—Twelve thousand miles of roadway, to connect the United States and Guatemalan borders with the Mexican capital and tap rich but now almost inaccessible regions, are planned by a technical commission representing the governments of twenty-three Mexican states. Work will be begun as soon as the ministry of communications approves the plan. The roads are expected to be completed within five years.

BULLARD TELLS OF BITTER ARMISTICE MORNING FIGHTING

U.S. COLONEL TRIED TO KIDNAP KAISER

AS THESE are personal memoirs of Experience; the pronoun "I" can never be out of sight. I am not offering these memoirs as absolute fact, but as my impression and belief at the time. —R. L. BULLARD.

THAT the Second Army fought right up to the minute of the armistice and did not get credit for a big advance on the eve of the armistice because they did not report it, is revealed in today's installment of Gen. Bullard's memoirs. He also tells of the difficulty of preventing fraternalization with the Germans after the armistice and the attempt to capture the Kaiser

CHAPTER XXVII—THE ARMISTICE

THE 2d Army stood on the 9th of November, 1918, expecting to take an offensive either straight toward Metz, pursuing a retiring enemy; or with the French to the Chateau-Salins region to the southeast of Metz.

"On the 9th (Date, November 14) it began to seem as though the enemy on the front of my army was gradually withdrawing material and getting ready to retire. I therefore ordered a general advance for the 10th. Almost before the order could be issued, or rather could reach the troops, directions came from our general headquarters to do the very thing that I had decided to do."

At the same time we seemed on the verge of an armistice; but the desire in the enemy to have an armistice had been brought about by fighting alone, so it was manifestly wrong now to desist from fighting. So on it went.

Nov. 10th, at 7:00 a. m., my four divisions in the front-line attacked. They found the enemy everywhere and in very good strength and organized upon the strongly defended Hindenburg second line. We fought at it all day. The enemy seemed to strengthen from west to east, the ground being to him more favorable in the east.

The 33d (Illinois) Division—General George Bell—on the west, did well; the 28th Division next, under General Hay, had some but no great success in advance; the 7th Division, under General Wittenmeyer, had hard fighting and advanced some, perhaps half a kilometer; the 92d Division, under General Ballou, gained a good deal of ground but did the enemy little harm.

Altogether at night the line seemed to have advanced all along from one-half to two kilometers—as well as I could expect. I did not expect the first day to do more than gain full contact and feel the enemy's positions thoroughly. This was accomplished; and so for the 11th of November I ordered his weak points to be attacked by concentrations thereon along the whole front.

Fought Right Up To Last Minute

"Today (November 11) the attack was renewed as ordered, but about 6:30 a. m. a telegram announced that armistice would go into effect at 11:00 a. m. and all fighting and advance must then stop. I gave the corresponding orders.

"Some of our divisions of the line had already been pretty thoroughly committed to the attack, others not. The former continued, the latter desisted, though all were partially at least engaged. As on the 10th, the best work was done on the west by the 33d Division, General George Bell. The others accomplished little. But the fighting continued until the last minute.

"I regard this day as the last fighting of the war. So I early went, with an aide, to near the front line to see the last of it, to hear the crack of the last guns in the greatest war of all ages. It was an occasion of great history and great happenings. Our men showed great zest in the striking of the last blows against the enemy. I stayed until 11:00 a. m., when, all being over, I returned to my headquarters.

MAN MUST BE HIS OWN AUDIENCE

By DR. FRANK CRANE

A MAN must be his own audience. Our most valued approval and our severest criticism ought to come from ourselves.

If we are honest, are not blinded by egotism and are unafraid, we can hear a great deal of truth from ourselves.

Mr. Coolidge has not only to please the hundred million or so people of the United States, but first of all he must please Calvin Coolidge, and he will not please the former without pleasing the latter.

The approbation of the mob is fickle. It comes and goes and depends a great deal upon luck. The approbation of one's self, if he is honest, is sure when he does a good deed, and his condemnation is just as sure if he does a bad one.

There is a good deal said about living one's own life, and there is a truth contained in this gospel. What you do must first of all satisfy yourself.

I knew a man that loved trees and outdoors. They wanted him to be a bond salesman, and he was a pretty good one, but he had to live in the city and tramp sidewalks. He loved the open spaces and the woods. So he gave up a large income as a bond salesman and took a small one as a forester, but he was happy because he pleased himself, and in the long run he did better work.

The outer audience and the inner audience are checks on each other. They are like the three departments of the United States—the Supreme Court, the Congress, and the President.

So a man's mind is composed, according to the old anthropologists, of the intellect, the sensibilities and the will.

All of these are necessary, but none of them can be trusted in the extreme without being checked by the others.

If a man governs his life entirely by his intellect without ever yielding to passion, he becomes cold and hard.

If a man follows only his feelings, he will speedily run into folly, for those feelings need to be checked by the judgment and one's commonsense.

So if one is governed entirely by his will and that will is not held in check by the passions and the intellect he will become known as a stubborn man.

The problem of life seems to be maintaining the balance between all these three things.

When a man does not please his inner audience of himself, he is seen to be insincere. We will not follow a man who will not follow himself. Example is better than precept, because example shows that a man thinks enough of his advice to follow it himself.

It will not do to despise the outer audience any more than the inner. The outer is a constant check upon the inner. It enables you to tell whether the judgment of the inner audience is correct or not.

HIGH SCHOOL BRIDE KEPT SECRET WELL

Kathryn Arline McAuley, a Somerville High School senior, became the bride of Cal Wayland Caldwell, Technology student, in Manchester, N. H., on September 20 last, and not even their most intimate friends knew of it until they decided that inasmuch as the end of their classroom days was at hand the world might as well know of their happiness.

GIVES LIE TO PORT DATA

Officials of the Maritime Association of the Chamber of Commerce today said figures Washington indicating that Boston had dropped from sixth to tenth place in overseas commerce during 1924 are false.

Collector of the Port W. W. Lufkin substantiated the shipping men's assertion by producing Treasury Department statistics which showed Boston is the third port in the amount of imports, sixth in combined imports and exports, and tenth in exports only.

Boston figures were: Imports, $252,851,646; exports, $37,355,646. New York, the pre-eminent port of the world, had a foreign commerce running into the billions.

William E. Blodgett, chairman of the governing board of the Maritime Association, said:

"If the port is to prosper we must have an equal chance at grain and grain product exports with the other ports of the North Atlantic seaboard. The present differential railroad freight rates favoring Philadelphia, Baltimore and other rivals, are destructive to our export commerce and Boston is becoming a mere 'port of call.'

"The Boston shipping interests have spent thousands of dollars during the last few years in threshing out this matter with the Interstate Commerce Commission, but recently the Commission ruled that it had no powers to grant us relief.

"Senator Butler has introduced a bill which will give the Commission the requisite power."

UMPIRES ARE THE REAL HERMITS OF BASEBALL

HAVE FEW PLAYER FRIENDS

Arbiters Are Also Absent at Baseball Meetings; Lead Lonesome Lives

By NICK FLATLEY

Calling the balls and strikes isn't a soft job, as everybody knows. The umpires get most of the razzing in the world, and mighty little praise.

They live sort of a life apart. You see them on the field. After the contest, they vanish somewhere. They're around the hotels where the players live. They don't appear at the base-ball meetings. They lead sort of a lonesome existence, as far as the game, of which they're such an important part, goes.

The technique of the job appears simple enough—just calling strike or ball, safe or out. They're generally wrong, in the fan opinion, and always right in their own, but you wouldn't think the work required a whole lot of training. Every bird who yells "Robber," or "Kill him," is sure he could go in and name the plays as they happen.

But getting up to the big show is a long, tough rattle. It takes hard years of experience, down in the minor leagues, where pop bottles and bricks and fists fill the air every so often. A thousand umpires work in organized leagues throughout the country. They are watched and scouted and sifted. And only two or three annually rate highly enough for even a big league tryout. And the percentage who come up and remain is remarkably small.

TWO of the new crop have been working these last few days at the Fenway—Bill McGowan and Harry Geisel. They are under the guidance of Ol' Bill Dineen, one of the daddies of the arbitrators. But umpiring isn't a new job to either. Geisel started calling 'em away back in 1910, out in the Western League. McGowan first took a shot at it in 1912, in the Tri-State, when he was just seventeen years old.

Both have been on the job steadily ever since, and are just arriving where the proceeds make it really worth while, and the life is as enjoyable as it can possibly be where every red-blooded person bumped into is a potential enemy. The life of an umpire, as they say, isn't all skittles and beer, even in the Canadian leagues.

A TWO-DOLLAR bill steered Harry Geisel back of the big protector and the mask. He was playing semi-pro ball, first base, in his home town, Indianapolis, in 1910. He says he was a pretty good first baseman, too. His team travelled the West, and one village was shy an ump. So Harry, who had a bad hand, was impressed into service. He did a good job, found that the umpires were paid two dollars a game more than the players in the sticks and decided to add that much extra to his daily stipend. He has worked in every classification league there is, as has McGowan. Probably they're the only pair in the large game who have done just that.

WHAT THEY SAY GOES! THEY'RE UMPIRES

Here's where we get better acquainted with the arbiters at Fenway Park. Upper right, Bill Dineen, who enjoys getting in there behind the plate on a broiling hot day and calling them as he sees them. In centre, Harry Geisel snapped while calling a play at third "safe." Lower right, William McGowan, another of Ban Johnson's dispute adjusters.

In the paced race of thirty miles Vincent Madonna, George Chapman, Henry Wynsdau and Dave Lands are the riders.

BROWNS OPEN 4-GAME SERIES AT FENWAY

By NICK FLATLEY

George Sisler's Browns opened at the Fenway this afternoon, and the act will be put on daily for the rest of the week. Four shots at the boys from the banks of the Mississippi will, if successful, help the Fohls in their present drive to escape from the cellar. From what the natives have shown in the last week or so, they have no more claim on the foundation than two or three other clubs.

Five of the eight games played thus far at the Fenway have been featured by extra good Boston pitching. Four victories fell into the locker, and the ultimate defeat by Cleveland was just one of those unlucky affairs. Paul Zahniser, adopted from the Washington Senators, pitched a great ball game, and deserved a better fate, if he can repeat the performance at intervals, he will be one of the whining pitchers when the curtain falls down.

The Browns are the victims of injury. The key to their whole machine, Walter Gerber, is on the injured list, so the team isn't what it should be. Little Gerber is the best shortstop in the league. Before he was hurt the Sislers were picking up momentum, and threatening to get up with the race. Till he comes back, they will just have to mark time.

Fans all over the land, though, are more interested in Manager George than they are in the fate of his club. The nifty boy is hitting again as he did in the good old days. He was pretty good last season, but not the danger spot of his normal career. This spring, however, he has been busting the ball with farce and regularity.

He started the campaign by hitting in 36 games, or something like that, and his average has been stout and imposing right down the line. He has a mauling ball club, too, one that can bother any pitcher. His shortened infield hurts the team strength, but Ken Williams and George and a few of the other boys can certainly bust that apple.

Fenway Sidelights

LARGE MISTER BOONE is the most improved player in the league. He is awake on the bases, gives every pitcher heart failure and has improved on his million per cent. in the garden. His glove capture of Luke Sewell's hoist was a real play.

RUFFING does a bit of warming up every day, proving that he hasn't been spoiled by a couple of victories. He appears to be the right type.

THE new young men who are joining the club have the pep and ambition that some of the older fixtures would do well to emulate.

GETTING so now that the crowds are distinctly disappointed when the Sox fail to put on some kind of a ninth inning rumpus.

WINNING every other day isn't so bad, but it raises a whack with the Fohl hopes of a lonery streak of two consecutive games. Strange though it seem, the Sox haven't put a pair together yet.

O'BRIEN-MANDELL BOUT DENIED COAST FANS

Los Angeles, June 10 (A.P.).—There will be no fight between Tommy O'Brien of New York and Sammy Mandell of Rockford, Ill., for the lightweight crown discarded by Benny Leonard here on July 4. Prospect of such a match, announced after O'Brien and Mandell emerged victors from an elimination tournament staged here Saturday by Promoter Dick Donald, disappeared today when the one permit for an open air fight here available in July under the State boxing law was granted by the State Boxing Commission to Jack Doyle, who announced that his fistic show would be held on July 21.

BRAVES AFTER EDGE OVER PIRATES

Pittsburgh, Pa., June 10.—Either Benton or Kamp will oppose Morrison in the third game of the Braves-Pirates series this afternoon. Felix will be in left field. Pirate score board carried Harris in left field until the eleventh inning yesterday, when Carey questioned Felix's hit, claiming he batted out of turn. Then it was discovered he had been playing all afternoon.

Meadows pitched nine scoreless innings in a row but his judgment in passing Bob Smith to take a chance on Barnes was poor.

ROCHESTER SIGNS UP SPECTACLED PLAYER

Rochester, N. Y., June 9 (A.P.).—Asa Small, Bowdoin College outfielder, has signed a contract with the Rochester International Club, it was announced today by Business Manager Walter E. Hapgood. Small will report on June 16. He is a star track man as well as baseball player. Major league scouts turned him down because he wore spectacles.

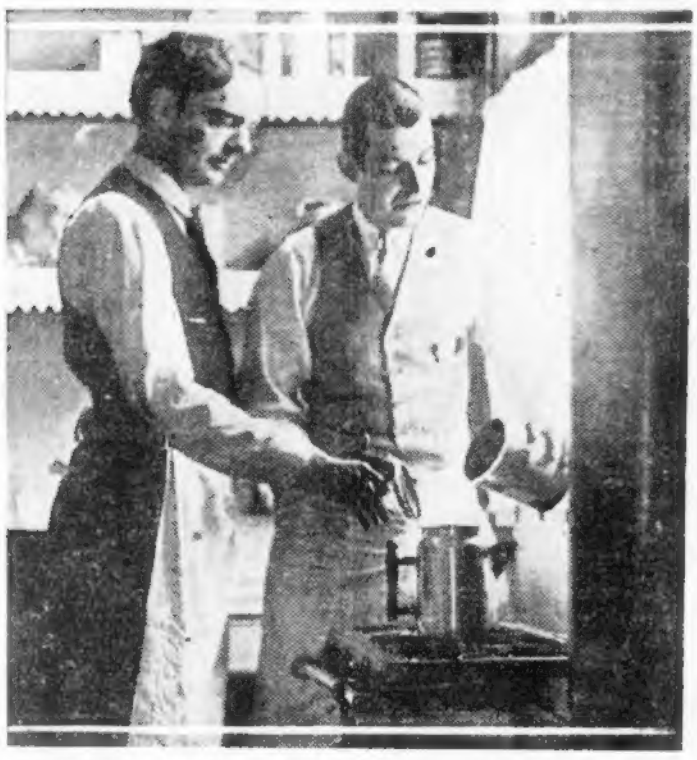
Lowrie Tells Why He Is Dying in Prison



Blackie is much the topic of conversation at the prison and Lowrie and his friend Duffie, still talking about their pal, went to the kitchen and made some coffee.

(Posed for the Boston Evening American by Paul Porter as Lowrie and Paul Donah as Duffie, both of the "Rose-Marie" Company, now playing in Boston.)

uary in the village. All that morning was turmoil. Mrs. Field arrived and became hysterical. She upbraided me for not having waited until she got there before having the body taken away. I told her Blackie had looked terrible—which he had—and that I felt it better that the undertaker should make the remains presentable before she or anyone else saw them. She went down to the village. I slipped up to my room for more whiskey.

It was not until lunch time that I awoke to the fact of a lecture engagement I had for 3 o'clock that afternoon in New York. The Women's Equal Suffrage League was at that time holding daily afternoon meetings at its quarters in Fifth avenue, and advertising a different speaker each day.

Mrs. Chadbourne, one of the live wires of the organization, had been at Sing Sing some days before and had secured my promise to speak on the afternoon of March 20. Osborne, by the way, was opposed to equal suffrage at that time, but came over later. His attitude on that question was being used against him by his enemies.

When my promise to speak that afternoon occurred to me my first impulse was to cancel the engagement by telephone. I had been missing sleep for several nights, and the events of the day had been nerve sapping. But after eating lunch I felt better and decided to go. It was understood that I was to take dinner at the Chadboure residence after the lecture, and atatend a theatre party that night.

I packed my evening clothes in a suitcase and caught a train for New York which delivered me at the Grand Central terminal with just barely time enough to get me to the lecture hall.

My address proved wretched. My brain refused to work. Besides, it was a new subject with me. I got through somehow, and was followed by a speaker from Boston who had his facts splendidly arrayed and made up for my deficiency. Then followed the usual hour of talk with groups that came up to the platform—one of the severest ordeals that public lecturers have to go through—and the ride to Mrs. Chadbourne's home, accompanied by the Boston lecturer and our hostess.

Pointers on How to Address Public

I have forgotten the Boston gentleman's name, but vividly recall that he patronizingly gave me oodles of advice on "how to talk before the public" as the vehicle proceeded slowly up Fifth avenue. That embarrassed me, especially with Mrs. Chadbourne present. Several times she tactfully tried to change the subject, evidently sensing my displeasure, but the man from Boston kept right on.

Before we reached our destination I wanted to jump out of the machine and run. The thought of sitting through a formal dinner and listening to the same monotone for an hour or so appalled me.

When we arrived at the house Mrs. Chadbourne informed us that dinner would be at 7, and I was escorted by a servant to a room where there was a bath. It was then about 4. Soon as I was alone I ran my fingers through my hair in nervous frenzy. It was at the breaking point. I had not really relaxed my mind or body for over a week.

The thought of the coming dinner, when I would be supposed to be "brilliant," or at least "interesting," weighed heavily upon me. Nor did the proposed theatre party afterward, to see "The Lion and the Mouse," offer any lure.

I felt that I couldn't stand any more—that I must get off by myself. Above all, my whole body was shrieking for alcohol, for something that would quiet my nerves quickly.

I stood in the center of the room for a long time, thinking. My suitcase was there. I was supposed to be dressing for dinner. I spied a desk and writing material. I sat down and penned a hasty note to Mrs. Chadbourne, pleading sudden indisposition and asking to be exout into the hall, left the note conspicuously on a stand—I don't know whether it was ever found or not nor just what happened when I failed to show up for dinner—and descended the stairs.

Return to 'Normalcy' Through Stiff Drinks

A moment later I was on the street, going fast as I could toward Broadway—and a saloon. It was only after I had taken several stiff drinks of whisky that I felt normal. An awful temptation came over me to go to a hotel and drink from a bottle, but I smothered it down. I got back to Sing Sing before 9 o'clock. Tom had returned. He told me he was well pleased with the way I had handled the situation in his absence. I went to bed quite early.

Three or four days later Jack, the chauffeur, and I drove to the crematory for Blackie's ashes. To my utter confusion, mixed with a feeling of horror, I was handed a tin can, sealed, and with a slip of paper pasted across the top bearing Blackie's name. I took it in my hand gingerly after signing a receipt and walked out to the car.

"What's the matter, isn't he ready?" asked Jack as I approached. "What's that you've got in your hand?"

"It's Blackie," I said resentfully, proffering the can to him.

"No, no—I don't want it. Take it away" he half shouted, crouching against the farther side of the car. "Gee, but that's fierce. Where're we going to put it?"

His shrinking attitude amused me. I suddenly saw the funny side of the situation.

Blackie Still Articulated in Ashes

"We could give him the entire back seat," I laughed, "but let's be sociable. Let's let him sit between us."

I climbed in and placed the can on the seat close to Jack. As I did so something rattled inside, and Jack nearly leaped from the vehicle.

"My God! What was that?" he gasped.

The noise had startled me, too. It seemed uncanny. I also made an involuntary movement to get out—and walk home. Then I happened to remember poor Blackie's gold fillings. That was it, of course. There was gold in the ashes. The dross had burned away—the gold was left. I tried to say something religious to that effect, something about the gold in Blackie's character surviving even death, but it went over Jack's head, I think.

"Well," he said resignedly, "this is a new one on me, but it's all in a lifetime. I'll be glad when we get him home."

A few days later elaborate funeral services for Blackie were held in Sing Sing prison, the can of ashes being covered with velvet and placed in a mahogany box, beautifully inlaid with abalone. These services were later repeated at Auburn prison, and then the little casket, bearing an appropriate inscription, was buried in a private plot at Auburn.

Unable to Attend Blackie's Funeral

I did not attend either of these services. Much as I had liked Blackie, and much as I revered his strength of character and fortitude under suffering, the lure of whisky proved too much.

The Sunday Blackie's funeral was held at Sing Sing I was drunk. And although as an honorary member of the Mutual Welfare League I was invited to accompany the remains to Auburn and attend the services there, I declined.

For a period of several days I had been going about with my head awhirl and there were moments when I really feared I might be going crazy. The only thing that seemed to give me any relief from my tense condition was whisky, and I drank lots of it.

(To be continued tomorrow.)

Gallows Hill, Old North Bridge, Hawthorne's Birthplace, Peabody Museum, Essex Institute and the House of the Seven Gables are among the treasures which annually bring thousands of Americans to "the neck of land called Naumkeag."

BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN

Our Salem has many a glorious Yesterday to talk about, but is too busy with the affairs of a prosperous Today. Her cotton, leather and shoe industries and the manufacture of games afford profitable employment to thousands.

Salem, at 300 a 'Go-Getter' Community, Sends a Minute Man Embassy to Oregon!

NO ONE IN AUTHORITY at the City Hall in Salem, Mass., was able to recall yesterday the phraseology of the letter which came several years ago to the Witch City from the capital of the State of Oregon, but everybody remembered the gist of it.

"Please," implored the Oregon Salem to the Massachusetts Salem, "please get yourself another name and leave 'Salem' to be borne by a more progressive town."

The letter from the Western capital implied that the Puritan Salem had been sleeping one hundred years, that it attracts the curious only as Pompeii attracts them, that it lacks grit and gumption and is living in and upon its Past.

Which, coming from a city of 17,679 people to a historic community three times as large, was, to say the least, a startling, if not modest, petition.

The birthplace of Timothy Pickering and Nathaniel Hawthorne, the city which makes claim to being the scene of the "first armed resistance to royal authority," in the year 1775, might have said something sharp in reply, but wise old Salem, recognizing the "publicity" touch of the expert secretary of an enterprising chamber of commerce, refused to nibble.

Concerning Salem, Oregon

Other Salems—the Oregon request went to all of them—were not so shrewd. They resented this most unusual request. Some of them waxed sarcastic, as the saying is, and replied with heat and indignation, the result being columns of newspaper space, here and there, and the free advertising to the world that Salem IS the capital of Oregon, is situated on the Willamette River about fifty miles south of Portland, has several woolen and flour mills, evaporating and canning factories, and, in addition to the State House, is the site of many State institutions.

And that was the end of that. Salem, Massachusetts, went right on making superior cottons, the best of leathers, the finest of shoes and the most interesting of games, and year after year has entertained more thousands upon thousands of visitors. Salem in Oregon continued to grow, too, and today, with a population of only 20,278, is the "second largest community in the State."

Our own Salem, the Salem of John Endecott and Roger Williams, of the witchcraft delusion and the North Bridge, of Hawthorne and the East India trade, is making plans to celebrate next year the 300th anniversary of its settlement in 1626 by Roger Conant and his companions. Captain Endecott came two years later.

The Pilgrims of Plymouth are looked upon as very early pioneers of New England, but Roger Conant and his companions came to Cape Ann only three years, and to Salem only six years, after the landing at Plymouth. They brought with them the Sheffield patent which authorized the settling of the North Shore of Massachusetts Bay.

Cape Ann having been found to be a poor place for husbandry in Summer, and a bleak residence for the Winter fisheries, they soon moved on to the "pleasant and fruitful neck of land called Naumkeag."

The tercentenary of Salem will be a big affair. Whether it will take the form of pageantry remains to be determined, but the city government is considering the subject, with, of course, the assistance of Essex Institute, and those who know Salem and her progressive people have reason to look forward to the Witch City's 1926 birthday party with every expectation that it will be vivid, comprehensive, instructive and interesting.

Witch City's Tercentenary

The schools will take a prominent part in the tercentenary, as a matter of course, notably the State Normal School, since 1854 one of the newer Salem's proudest possessions, and the Salem High School, with an enrollment of 1,460 students.

One of the most distinctive possessions of Salem High School is the champion debating team of the United States, which, as may be seen by the table printed in detail below today's illustration, has established a record of eighteen consecutive victories.

If you will examine this record, you will observe that the young Salem debaters have been meeting all comers—and toppling them over, team by team. The Yale freshmen are on the list, you will see, and likewise the freshmen of Hanover.

These youthful Salem orators have gone as far away from home as Binghamton, N. Y., and Leonard Hall, Maryland, and always the result has been the same—victory for Salem.

Now, the 1,460 students of Salem High are quite like normal young Americans in other high schools. They want their school to be well represented on every field of interscholastic competition, but they have a particular fondness for football and baseball.

They were not particularly interested in the Debating Society, in its beginning—as a school, at all events—but as this phenomenal record began to make itself manifest Salem High began to take notice, became more interested as one success followed another, and eventually displayed as much interest as is shown in real champions in any form of endeavor.

Out on the Pacific coast, in the meantime, another high school debating team had been making records, the team which represents Salem, Oregon.

The achievement of that other Salem, indeed, is almost a duplicate of the Massachusetts story.

Three times in the past ten years the debaters of Oregon's Salem High have carried off the Pacific coast championship!

Out of eighteen joint debates—and they have met the best argumentators their part of the country could put forward—they have seventeen times emerged victorious!

Which facts having come to the attention of Vice-Principal William R. Barry of the Massachusetts High School—with Miss Helena Shortell one of the teacher-coaches of the Debating Society—Salem, Massachusetts, determined upon a challenge, or invitation, to Salem, Oregon.

That challenge has been accepted.

The debates will take place in May of next year.

One team of three debaters will make the journey from the Bay State to Oregon, while the Western high school will send three of its best to Massachusetts.

The question will be: "Resolved, That the States should ratify without delay the proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution, empowering the Congress to pass a Federal child labor law."

In Oregon, the youthful debaters from Massachusetts will support the negative side; when Oregon comes to the Bay State, the Massachusetts speakers will take the affirmative. By this method the judges will be enabled to pass upon the comparative ability of the debaters, rather than the merits of the question.

And in this day, when States and cities and sections are fast developing into "boosters," and competing one with another for favorable publicity, who shall say this joint debate between the two Salems will not be immensely helpful to both?

What better evidence that the first of their great schools is going in for the things that are of value can the fathers and mothers of Salem ask than the successes of these youthful debaters?

AMERICA'S CHAMPION DEBATERS

These fine-looking boys and girls, students of Salem, Mass., High School, are members of the Debating Society which holds the United States record for consecutive victories in debate. Since 1921 the debaters of Salem High have traveled 4,000 miles, met 17 opposing teams and vanquished them all. There may, after all, be something in a name, for it develops that the best debaters of the Pacific Coast are the young folks who represent Salem, Oregon, High School. That Salem has a record of 17victories in 18 debates. And so, next year, as part of the Puritan Salem's celebration of its tercentenary, Salem East will meet Salem West on the public platform.

This is the record of the Salem, Massachusetts, debaters up to date:

1922				1924
Salem	3	Holyoke	2	Salem	2	Yale Freshmen	1
Salem	3	Lowell	2	Salem	5	Powder Point	0
1923				Salem	2	Binghamton, N. Y..	1
Salem	4	M. C. Freshmen	1	Salem	5	Haverhill	0
Salem	4	Lowell	1	Salem	5	Leonard Hall, Md..	0
Salem	5	Troy, N. Y.	0	1925
Salem	3	Rutland, Vt.	2	Salem	3	Concord, N. H.	0
Salem	3	New London, Ct.	2	Salem	3	Dartmouth Freshmen	0
Salem	4	Brattleboro, Vt.	1
Salem	2	Troy, N. Y.	1
Salem	5	Beverly	0

Any city in the land would be proud of a high school that could train debaters like these; any high school enthusiastic in its support of such a Debating Society.

At the lower left, Hawthorne's "House of the Seven Gables"; right, the State House, Salem, Oregon.

Kendrick and Gray, the Pioneers

What stronger proof can our own Salem give to the world that it is an up-and-coming and thoroughly wide-awake community?

When these young people cross the continent to Oregon, their way paid because a proud old city has shown its faith in them, they will be so many living testimonies to the Middle West, and the Far West, and the country at large, that "old" Salem is very much alive; for surely no buried city, no dust-covered city, no city sleeping on its monuments, could produce boys and girls like these.

They will see out there in Oregon a young empire still in the making, a great State, larger in territory than all New England but with fewer inhabitants than Greater Boston, a veritable land of opportunity.

Oregonians informed about their great State's history may tell our young pilgrims how Kendrick and Gray, the agents of Boston fur merchants, traveled what is now Oregon as early as 1789, and that it was Gray who gave the Columbia River its name.

They will find traces everywhere of the influence of these Six States in the building of Oregon.

Proud as we have a right to be of the builders of New England, the chronicles of her early days contain, nevertheless, no more inspiring figure than Doctor Marcus Whitman, who was educated in medicine at the old Berkshire School in Pittsfield and in 1835 went from Boston to what was then called Oregon—the present States of Oregon, Washington and Idaho—as a representative of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. He saved Oregon to the Union.

DO read the story of Marcus Whitman, dear New England young people, if for no other reason as food or tonic for your courage and your patriotism. * * * The "covered wagon?" His was the FIRST party to reach the Pacific Coast by that means. Whitman is one of the martyrs of the Republic.

On every side, our young Salem friends will meet kindly, helpful, friendly folk in Oregon, who know the story of their State intimately, and will be glad to tell it.

But, oh, what a story the youngsters of our old Salem will be able to tell the folks of this new Salem.

They may, for example, clear up a blurred page or two of history, and read to Oregon a copy of the inscription on old Salem's North Bridge:

"IN THE REVOLUTION THE FIRST ARMED RESISTANCE TO THE ROYAL AUTHORITY WAS MADE AT THIS BRIDGE, 26 FEB., 1775, BY THE PEOPLE OF SALEM. THE ADVANCE OF 300 BRITISH TROOPS, LED BY LT.-COL. LESLIE AND SENT BY GOV. GAGE TO SEIZE MUNITIONS OF WAR, WAS HERE ARRESTED.

How Colonel Leslie was induced to abandon his search, withdraw his regiment and return to Boston, is an interesting story. Edmund Burke discussed this "first expedition," as he called it, in the British Parliament.

Oregon will ask our young friends about the "burning" of the witches, of course, and may be expected to look surprised when Massachusetts tells them the truth, that no one accused of witchcraft was ever "burned." Whence came the name of Gallows Hill?

But if our Salem debaters were to spend a year in Oregon, and then another year, and a year after that, and were to lecture every day and all night, they could no more than begin the story of one of the most historic, most interesting and most romantic cities in all America.

Salem's New Hotel

Asleep? Let them tell Oregon of a city so very much alive that within an hour's ride from Boston its people are bringing to completion a $750,000 hotel; of how they will be entertained this Summer by a stock company picked from the best players available on Broadway; of how one of their greatest industries continues busy and prosperous at a time when textiles generally are reported to be in the doldrums.

We hope these debates will be tremendously successful and that they will lead to other pilgrimages and receptions of the same sort.
